Financial reporting is at an interesting juncture. Against a background of continuing economic uncertainty there has been significant evolution and development of accounting in areas such as corporate governance, digitalisation, financial regulation, accounting standards, auditing practices and integrated reporting.

This Symposium brings together a series of high profile speakers to discuss the future of financial reporting and some of these areas. It provides a forum for both practitioners and academics to hear and engage in the debate with the following well-informed speakers. The symposium presentations and discussions should also serve as a valuable teaching aid for those academics engaged in financial reporting and contemporary issues in accounting at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.
